BO - 16mth, entire male Dobermann

If you are looking for a young male Dobermann.....Bo might just be your match.

I currently have two Dobermans at home from the same litter. Our female Charlie and male Bo. Both are beautiful, loving dogs. They do look after each other and get along most of the time, although Charlie does tend to be more protective and jealous than Bo. This has been causing arguments between the siblings in more recent times and creating quite a stressful home environment for the dogs and family. Regretfully, my wife and I are unable to spend the time required to separately train the dogs in the hope of rectifying this problem.

The reason I have chosen Bo for adoption over Charlie is because Bo is more confident in himself, more relaxed when meeting new people, and should rehome a lot easier than Charlie.

Bo has been brought up in a loving house around teenagers. Spending the day inside and outside of the house, he does stay inside during the evening. He has not had a lot of association with other dogs or around other animals apart from our chickens.

Like most Dobs, he wants to be around his owner as much as possible and has lots of love to give. Unfortunately, I do not have bloodline papers to prove he is a purebred, or have I had DNA tests done that I believe some people do request.
